New to the game: (Up)Skilling young people through gamified approaches

Due to a variety of factors, today's labour environment is becoming more complex, uncertain, and competitive. Recent graduates and young people in general are the most affected social group: the youth unemployment rate in September 2021 was 15.9 % for the EU and 16% for the euro area (Eurostat, Youth Unemployment).

One of the reasons behind youth unemployment is a skills mismatch between the skills requested by employers and the skills young applicants possess.

This situation requires urgent action to which the European Commission reacted, amongst other initiatives, by launching the Pact for Skills, a shared management model for skills development in Europe. Social and proximity economy is one of the industrial sectors the Pact will focus on.

During the last years, efforts have been made also to improve the capacity of the vocational education and training sector to take into account the specificities and potential of the social economy through alliances and partnerships with many organisations.

The COMPETE project, led by the Italian cooperative Demetra Formazione, focused mainly on the identification of needs and the acquisition, by young people, of competencies in terms of soft skills. The initiative was also an opportunity to further test the potential of using gamified training approaches.

This conference has the objective to highlight some results of the project and compare them with other realities and practices in different EU Member States, in order to contribute to the development of a European framework of training for young people.

Community action for social emancipation, dignity, and access to rights in vulnerable contexts

Palau Robert
Passeig de Gràcia, 107
Barcelona

Over 4 years, the project "Integral Ecology for Children's Rights", funded by the "Impresa Sociale con I Bambini" (...) has worked for the promotion, valorisation, and use of community resources' flows for the social emancipation and human development of vulnerable family contexts with children. In this way, it has generated a system that can guarantee concrete access to rights, while being confronted with different starting situations and the additional complications related to the COVID-19 SARS pandemic.

During this meeting, the partnerships of Messina and Brescia (IT) propose a narration of their experience and a comparison with processes that respond to similar needs from other European territories and countries.

It is also an opportunity to get to know the experience of the "Impresa Sociale con I Bambini", conceived and wanted to provide an original and systemic approach to policies for promoting the emancipation of minors and their contexts.

The project was selected by Con i Bambini within the framework of the Fund to combat child educational poverty. The Fund is the result of an agreement between the Foundations of banking origin represented by Acre, the National Forum of the Third Sector and the Government. It supports interventions aimed at removing economic, social and cultural obstacles that prevent children from fully enjoying the educational processes. In order to implement the Fund's programmes, in June 2016 the social enterprise Con i Bambini was set up, a non-profit organisation entirely owned by the Fondazione CON IL SUD. www.conibambini.org
